Comments

The Fund was down by -3.17% in February a bit below of the All Shares Index by 25bps.

February is typically a month when investors adopt a wait-and-see approach, awaiting the release of corporate results for Q4 and the full year 2025, which are due out in March. Against a backdrop of lower trading volumes and concerns over rumours of war in the Middle East, the Chinese market has returned to its levels at the start of the year.

We have taken some profits on a few positions, but we are adopting a 'wait-and-see' approach as China may not be so badly affected by the US-Iran conflict.

Beijing's "dual circulation" strategy—first introduced in 2020 to enhance self-reliance and strengthen China's strategic leverage within the global economy—has become particularly valuable in the current environment. It helps cushion the domestic economy from external shocks and positions China as a more attractive destination for foreign investment, especially relative to other Asian markets that are far more exposed to persistent energy volatility. Moreover, early details emerging from the ongoing "Two Sessions" meetings in Beijing—largely overshadowed by the unfolding crisis in Iran—indicate that the central government is determined to reinvigorate the domestic economy. Policy priorities include job creation, boosting household consumption, and ending the deflationary pressures that have weighed on growth.

With stability in the Middle East increasingly out of reach, and with uncertainty rising due to sustained oil shocks, the potential for global food shortages, and an elevated risk of global stagflation, investors worldwide may need to reassess their portfolio positioning. After undergoing a substantial correction, China's economy is now poised for renewed expansion and is better insulated than many of its peers. As a result, the "great rebalance" we highlighted in our January comments may arrive sooner than expected.

Following a detailed analysis of our portfolio holdings, we have very few companies that could be affected by the war in Iran. Consequently, any market weakness and/or weakness in our holdings presents attractive entry points.
